Literary rights in the unpublished writings of James P. Mitchell in his papers and in other collections of papers in the Eisenhower Library are reserved to Mrs. Mitchell during her lifetime and thereafter to the people of the United States.

By agreement with the donor the following classes of documents will be withheld from research use:

1. Papers relating to the family and private business affairs of James P. Mitchell.
2. Papers relating to the family and private business affairs of other persons who have had correspondence with James P. Mitchell.
3. Papers relating to investigations of individuals or to appointments and personnel matters.
4. Papers containing statements made by or to James P. Mitchell in confidence unless in the judgment of the Director of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library the reason for the confidentiality no longer exists.
5. All other papers which contain information or statements that might be used to injure, harass, or damage any living person.

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Papers of James P. Mitchell span the years 1953 through 1964. However, the bulk of the papers, consisting of correspondence, memoranda, notes, speeches, reports, printed and near-print materials, invitations, and other items, pertain to Mr. Mitchell's career as Secretary of the Department of Labor, October 1953 through January 1961.

James Mitchell was appointed Secretary of Labor on October 8, 1953, after having served the Eisenhower Administration as Assistant Secretary of the Army for six months. The Cabinet appointment came when President Eisenhower's first Labor Secretary, Martin P. Durkin, former president of the AFL Plumbers' Union, resigned to protest what he felt was a failure by the Administration to carry out an agreement to support changes in the Taft-Hartley law. Mitchell, a fifty-two-year-old lifelong Republican who had never been a union member, brought to the position the background of a business executive, and was the first personnel and industrial relations expert to hold the post.

Labor leaders expressed mixed reactions concerning Mitchell's appointment: Al Hayes, president of the International Association of Machinists, commented, "Incredible...now even the Department of Labor has been turned over to big business;" Walter P. Reuther, president of the CIO, felt Mitchell had "a good reputation among the labor people" and promised his union would extend the secretary "every cooperation;" and George Meany, president of the AFL and a supporter of Martin Durkin, withheld comment. President Eisenhower commented that the new secretary was "a man whose interest is in people and not merely the economic processes of the country." (These quotations are taken from materials in the James P. Mitchell Papers, Secretary of Labor Series, Articles about the Secretary.)

Upon assuming his post, Secretary Mitchell was confronted with a poorly-managed Department of Labor, with its numerous bureaus and offices isolated from one another and from the Office of the Secretary. Mitchell immediately invited candid comments on the workings of the department and introduced regular and open assemblies with all employees to keep them informed of the activities of the various branches. The secretary recognized merit within his department and encouraged up-grading of civil servants rather than bringing in numerous political appointees as the department continued to grow in size and operation. By 1956 the Department of Labor had a staff which had increased to over 6,400 members and a budget that had more than doubled since 1950 (from $223,000,000 to $468,000,000).

Secretary Mitchell approached his job with the idea that the Labor Department should serve the public in general -- that is, everyone who worked and not just organized labor. Throughout the Eisenhower Administration he endeavored to promote improved labor-management relations, believing that the two should work together as partners. Mitchell, who recognized collective bargaining as a permanent fixture in American labor, felt that unions must live up to their contracts while employers must in turn accept unions as a challenge to the effectiveness of their personnel policies. At the center of Mitchell's approach to solving labor-management differences was a call for understanding, common sense, and enlightened self-interest. He asked business to curtail inflationary profit-taking and labor to moderate wage demands.

It was always Secretary Mitchell's belief that the Eisenhower Administration could win the confidence and support of traditionally Democratic American labor. To this end he spent great time and energy addressing labor groups of every size and in every locale. During the 1956 campaign he was one of the Administration's most vigorous campaigners and a staunch defender of the Eisenhower record. His efforts probably helped Eisenhower carry 48% of the union vote in 1956 (compared to only 39% in the 1952 election) and 65% of the nonunion labor vote. (Thomson, Charles A. H. and Frances M. Shattuck, The 1956 Presidential Campaign. The Brookings Institute, Washington, D.C., 1960.)

In December 1956 the long-awaited reunification of labor occurred when the AFL and CIO, which had been separate labor federations since 1935, merged to form the AFL-CIO. Although Mitchell was generally regarded by labor as being pro-business, he was still able to maintain cordial relations with the top labor leaders in the country. He opposed, as did President Eisenhower, a federal right-to-work law and the attempt to bring unions within the scope of anti-trust legislation. He did not favor repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, but felt it needed extensive revision. He campaigned for improved local labor legislation, believing that the states rather than the federal government should be responsible for unemployment and workman's compensation programs. Under Mitchell the Labor Department served the states as a clearing house of information about state labor laws and labor regulations. Due largely to his efforts, in 1955 forty-two states improved their workmen's compensation legislation and thirty-eight states increased or extended unemployment compensation. The Department of Labor also worked to extend the coverage of state and federal minimum wage laws, and during the Eisenhower Administration the general minimum wage was increased from $.75 per hour to $1.00. To insure salary increases, the department cracked down on contractors not paying wages guaranteed in government contracts.

Another concern of Secretary Mitchell was the shortage of skilled laborers and what was termed the "evaporating manpower pool." To ease this shortage the Labor Department instituted vast programs in vocational education, apprenticeships and on-the-job training. Also, the department encouraged the hiring of some groups of marginal workers, particularly the many older workers in the country. Efforts were also made to improve the conditions of other marginal labor groups, such as migrant farm workers, by programs like the Mexican Farm Labor Program.

The decade of the 1950s was a time of labor disputes and disclosures of union corruption. Secretary Mitchell did not believe labor strikes were "inevitable," but when they did occur his reputation among union leaders as being "very able and fair" and a "shrewd bargainer" made him an important mediator. In 1953 he helped to settle the Louisville and Nashville Railroad strike, and during the 1956 steel strike he was able to get agreement to a three-year contract, the longest in steel industry history. When that steel contract expired and a nationwide strike ensued, Mitchell teamed up with Vice President Nixon to affect an end to the 116-day dispute in January 1960. Mitchell remained in the background during this important settlement, allowing the vice president to receive most of the publicity for arranging the end of the strike. It was left to Mitchell, however, to defend the settlement terms as noninflationary.

In 1957, as the McClellan Committee began to expose the misdeeds of the union officials and the movement for anti-union laws was gaining strength, Mitchell remained impartial. His department designed a program to prevent abuses in unions without imposing harsh government controls. This program was eventually incorporated into the Landrum-Griffin Act (also known as the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act) which was passed in September 1959. The act called for full disclosure of union operations (direct election of union officials by secret ballot, disclosures of welfare funds and union financial affairs) and penalties for violations. The Department of Labor was given the power to subpoena and investigate any charges brought to its attention, and by May 1960, two-hundred cases of union abuses were being processed per month by Mitchell's staff.

In addition to his Cabinet duties, Secretary Mitchell was also chairman of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Migratory Labor and the President's Distinguished Federal Civilian Service Awards Board, and served as vice-chairman of the President's Committee on Government Contracts. He was also a member of the Cabinet Committee on Price Stability for Economic Growth and the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped, and sat on the board of directors of the American Red Cross.

As the Eisenhower years came to an end, Mitchell was considered as a possible Vice Presidential running-mate for Richard Nixon in 1960. However, Henry Cabot Lodge finally became the Republican's choice. Mitchell's only political effort after leaving the Department of Labor was an unsuccessful campaign for the New Jersey governorship in 1961. Following that defeat, he returned to private business.

When Secretary Mitchell left Washington, he was believed by some to have been "the best Cabinet Officer Dwight David Eisenhower has been lucky enough to get and keep." (Willard Shelton, The Washington Guild, June 14, 1957.) James Mitchell himself believed that his major accomplishment had been to give "a new face to the Republican Party" in the eyes of American labor. Of the success and opportunities created for the party by his own personal rapport with labor he said, "Well, there is a foundation now to build on in the future."

The Papers of James P. Mitchell were received in two separate accessions, one in 1964 and the other in 1970. The two were originally processed as separate collections; however, they have now been integrated to form one single collection of 283 boxes.

The papers have been arranged into nine series: Secretary of Labor; Administrative; Labor Affairs; Committees, Councils and Boards; White House; Congressional; Political; Reading File; and Invitations. With the exception of the Labor Affairs series, these series titles are the same as those used by members of Secretary Mitchell's staff in organizing his files during the Administration. The Labor Affairs series was created by an Eisenhower Library staff archivist to incorporate all those materials which did not obviously belong to any of the other eight series. A large percentage of the documents or cases of documents in Mitchell's papers were marked by his staff in red pencil at the top with a heading (Administrative, Political, White House, etc.) to designate where that document was to be filed. In the first years of the Administration these headings were written out, but from 1959 through 1961 a combined letter-number abbreviation was used (such as ES - 1 which represents a document to be filed in the Bureau of Employment Security - Summary Plans and Reports folders). The documents which were never marked by Mitchell's staff have been arranged by an Eisenhower Library staff archivist either in combination with similar materials or in separate folders after the appropriate series for the material was determined.

Within each series, the documents are arranged by topic (also marked by Mitchell's staff) and then by chronology. In many cases, the red-pencilled topics (Bureau of Labor Statistics, President's Committee on Government Contracts, etc.) were used in the present arrangement of the collection for folder titles. In addition to the indication on the document of where it was to be filed, Mitchell's staff also noted (at the bottom) in which of Mitchell's files a copy of the document or a cross reference to it was to be placed. Yellow cross reference sheets were filed throughout the collection. However, it is not always possible to locate a document from a cross reference, which perhaps indicates that either some documents were not retained in the files or the collection received by the Eisenhower Library is incomplete.

The Mitchell Papers are most complete and detailed for the years 1955 and 1960, though the reason for this is not clear. Topics documented in the collection include Department of Labor administration, Republican party affairs, civil defense, labor disputes, migrant labor, civil rights in labor, minimum wage, the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act, unemployment insurance and other employee benefits, the federal budget, international labor affairs, the Landrum-Griffin Act, labor unions and union officials, economic affairs, federal-state relations in labor, departmental legislative programs and congressional relations, defense mobilization, labor-management relations, employment and manpower, labor standards, importation of foreign labor, public opinion on labor affairs, departmental agencies and bureaus, the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Secretary's Policy Committee, Presidential and various advisory committees, and Administration labor policies. Major correspondents include various labor leaders, members of unions and the working class in general, congressmen and senators, White House staff members, Department of Labor staff members, and other Cabinet officers.

A small portion of the 1953 materials in this collection are documents from the period in which Martin Durkin, Mitchell's predecessor, served as Secretary of Labor. Those few items in the collection dating from 1961 to 1964 consist of correspondence relating to Mitchell's business affairs with the Fund for International Social and Economic Education, the Committee for Improvement of Management in Government, the Committee for Economic Development, the National Civil Service League, and Crown Zellerbach Corporation. A number of books, photographs, records, films, and tapes were removed from the Mitchell Papers and turned over to the audio-visual and book collections of the Eisenhower Library.

DESCRIPTION OF SERIES

Box No. Series

1-54 Secretary of Labor, 1953-1961, 1964. 54 containers.

The bulk of this series consists of correspondence to and from Secretary Mitchell, most of which is of a personal nature such as congratulations and birthday and Christmas messages. Other materials include requests for the Secretary's autograph and photograph; articles written both by and about the Secretary; sponsorships accepted and declined; memberships; acknowledgments for publications received; the Secretary's speeches, addresses, news releases and trips; and albums of newspaper clippings (filed in half-suit boxes). [For the Secretary's statements before Congressional Committees, see the CONGRESSIONAL SERIES. For additional information on Mr. Mitchell's speeches and trips, see the INVITATION SERIES] The correspondence in the Secretary's personal file, arranged alphabetically, contains some information on labor policy, usually in letters to and from members of the Labor Department staff. Policy materials are also found in the folders entitled "Secretary's Personal File - Confidential." Throughout the series materials are arranged chronologically within a given topic.

55-87 Administrative, 1953-1961. 33 containers.

Materials contained in this series cover the administration of the Department of Labor and include correspondence, reports, studies, memoranda, printed materials, minutes of meetings, and bulletins. Topics include Department of Labor reorganization, regional offices, budget, programs, projects, committees, personnel, policies, and legislative programs. [For additional information on Department of Labor legislative programs see the CONGRESSIONAL SERIES] The two largest segments of the series are (1) those materials organized by departmental offices and bureaus -- Solicitor, Wage and Hour and Public Contracts, Apprenticeship, Labor Statistics, Employment Security, Women's Bureau, Labor-Management Reports, International Labor Affairs, Veteran's Reemployment Rights, Veterans' Employment Service, and Office of Information, and (2) those materials organized by individual Labor Department officials -- Under Secretary, Deputy Under Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Economic Advisor, Commissioner, Deputy Assistant Secretary, Administrative Assistant, Special Assistant, Solicitor, Executive Assistant, Bureau Director, and Consultant. Included in this portion of the series are the Weekly Activity Reports prepared for the Secretary by the Under Secretary and the Deputy Under Secretary. Policy materials are found in the chronologically-arranged minutes (incomplete) of the Secretary's Policy Committee (also called the Departmental Policy Committee with membership composed of the Secretary, Under Secretary, Assistant Secretaries, and the Solicitor) and in the Departmental Program and Operations Committee (membership the same as the Policy Committee with the addition of Bureau and Office Directors and the Special Assistants to the Secretary). [Materials on other Department of Labor Committees, such as the Program and

Planning and Review Committee and the Secretary's various advisory committees are filed in the COMMITTEE SERIES]

88-124 Labor Affairs, 1953-1961. 37 containers.

This series contains a variety of materials on labor topics such as the International Labor Organization, steel strikes and other labor disputes, Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, migratory farm workers and the Mexican Labor Program [see also the President's Committee on Migratory Labor filed in the COMMITTEE SERIES], minimum wage, guaranteed wage, right-to-work, labor leaders, companies, unions, government departments and agencies, and the public reaction to labor issues. Also included in the series is substantial material on several labor acts and bills such as the Taft-Hartley Act (and amendments), Kennedy-Ives Labor-Management Relations Bill, Welfare and Pension Plans Disclosure Bill, Railway Labor Act, Fair Labor Standards Act (and amendments), Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act (and violations), and the Landrum-Griffin Act (Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, including investigation and enforcement). Materials are arranged chronologically within each topic.

125-143 Committees, Councils and Boards, 1953-1961. 19 containers.

Includes materials on Presidential committees and boards (Government Contracts, Migratory Labor, Distinguished Federal Civilian Service Awards, Mutual Security), advisory bodies (Council of Economic Advisors, Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security, Young Workers), Cabinet committees (Price Stability; Wages; Costs and Prices), the National Labor Relations Board, Labor Department committees (Secretary's Labor Advisory Committee, various other advisory committees, Program Planning and Review Committee), Human Resources for Economic Development Task Force, and many others. Materials include correspondence, reports, minutes, and memoranda, and are organized chronologically by Committee. [Other committee materials appear in the CONGRESSIONAL, ADMINISTRATIVE, and WHITE HOUSE SERIES]

144-167 White House, 1953-1961. 24 containers.

Included are correspondence between the President (or members of his staff) and the Secretary of Labor (or members of his staff) on a variety of labor-related matters. Additional Presidential materials include State of the Union messages, other speeches and statements, press releases, executive orders, proclamations, directives, economic reports, appointments and recommendations, social functions, Cabinet meetings, and Executive Branch Liaison Office Fact Papers. The materials in the "White House - Confidential" and "White House - General" files contain correspondence and memoranda dealing with the Administration's labor policy and the public's reaction to it. Though many of these documents cannot be described in detail, they should not be dismissed because they have been designated "general." Materials have been arranged first by the given heading and then by chronology.

168-185 Congressional, 1953-1961. 18 containers.

Materials in this series (a large portion being copies) pertain to legislation, both proposed and enacted, primarily relating to labor affairs. Included are correspondence between the Department of Labor and the Vice President, the Speaker of the House and members of Congress; reports on Congressional hearings; Congressional Committees materials (Labor and Public Welfare, Education and Labor, Government Operations, Agriculture and Forestry, Appropriations, Banking and Currency, Joint Economic Committee); and statements made by Secretary Mitchell and Department of Labor staff members before Congressional Committees. The final third of the series deals with the national legislative programs designed by the Labor Department including the introduction and backing of bills, reports on status of legislation from the Solicitor, Bureau of the Budget reports, draft bills, and Department of Labor legal services. Materials are arranged chronologically under the given heading. [see ADMINISTRATIVE SERIES for additional materials on the Department of Labor legislative program]

186-202 Political, 1953-1961. 17 containers.

The bulk of the materials in this series pertain to the campaigns of 1956 and 1960 and reflect the role played by Secretary Mitchell in those campaigns as he was requested by Republican candidates and party officials to personally defend the Administration's labor policies. Many publications and campaign materials from the Republican National Committee and the Republican state committees are included, and a few Democratic National Committee materials are also found in this series. Materials are arranged chronologically under the headings Political, Republican Party, and Democratic Party.

203-223 Department of Labor Reading File, 1953-1961. 21 containers.

Copies of correspondence (primarily outgoing) from the Department of Labor and Secretary Mitchell arranged by chronology. Topics include every phase of labor policy, Department activities, and some personal matters.

224-283 Invitations, 1953-1961. 60 containers.

Correspondence, programs, informational reports, biographical sketches, schedules, and speech materials are included in this series and pertain to the thousands of requests made of Secretary Mitchell during the Administration to visit and speak to various groups throughout the country. Also included are invitations to foreign countries, to radio and television shows (including public reaction to Mitchell's appearances), and to social functions. The series contains materials concerning the economy, unemployment, strikes, unions and their leadership, political climate, party strength, important issues, and other kinds of briefing information relating to an area Secretary Mitchell was planning to visit. Some foreign policy material can be found in the files on foreign invitations extended to the Secretary. The series is arranged chronologically and then alphabetically by state, with accepted and declined invitations filed in separate alphabetical listings for each year.
