

BE

June 21, 1967

Dear Mr. Kennedy:

You are quite correct in your assumption that I served on the secretariat on the War Policies Commission during the early 1930's. While I met Senator Vandenberg at that time, indeed a few years later we became friends, he showed very little interest in the work of the commission. I think he rarely attended its formal meetings. Concerning your question about any connection between that experience and the caution I expressed in my final Presidential address, I assure you I find none whatsoever.

I became convinced in those early studies that industry wanted anything but war; in other words the hope of profits by industry was in no way a cause of war.

My 1961 caution in this matter was not inspired by any belief that any sector in the United States now wanted war. Rather I wanted to point out that so many sectors of our nation -- defense forces, industry and political officials -- were all influenced toward greater and greater armament production in time of peace. This identity of interest could, obviously, occasion a very frightening trend in this country. Indeed, this may be happening now.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

Mr. Theodore R. Kennedy
Professor of American Thought and Language
Michigan State University
East Lansing, Michigan

