

EISENHOWER, DWIGHT D.: Papers as President
NAME SERIES

SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The Name Series of the Papers of Dwight D. Eisenhower as President of the United States is comprised of approximately 32,000 pages of letters, memoranda, telegrams, lists, reports, and printed materials. The chronological scope of the bulk of the manuscripts is 1952 to 1961, although a substantial quantity is dated much earlier and a few items are dated as late as 1963. The series is arranged alphabetically by name of correspondent or subject, and chronologically thereunder.

The Name Series was apparently devised by either President Eisenhower or his personal secretary, Ann Whitman, primarily as a file for correspondence between the President and his friends and family. Consequently, the largest portion of the manuscript materials pertains to social and family matters--birthday and other anniversary greetings, social engagements, vacations, gifts received and given, memberships in clubs and associations, and the President's hobbies of golf, fishing, bridge, painting and cooking.

Although much of the social and family correspondence may be of only marginal interest to scholars, researchers interested in public policy, politics, the Presidency, or the philosophical side of Dwight D. Eisenhower should not dismiss this series as inconsequential, for it contains a significant quantity of documents pertaining to these matters. Civil rights, McCarthyism, fiscal and monetary policies, public power, public works, housing, farm policy, and labor matters are among the important domestic issues documented by the manuscripts. In the area of foreign policy, the Bricker Amendment, the Middle East, Europe, NATO, Latin America, foreign economic policy, nuclear weapons testing and disarmament, and the mutual security program are some of the prominent issues discussed at length.

The Name Series also contains rich documentation of political activities, including the 1952, 1956, and 1960 presidential elections, the "second term" issue in 1956, party patronage, and state politics. There is also a substantial quantity of materials on the institution of the Presidency. Eisenhower's philosophy on the scope and responsibilities of the office and the sources of presidential power and leadership are documented, as are executive-congressional relations, presidential staff organization, presidential transition from the Truman administration to that of Eisenhower, and presidential public relations, including public relations techniques, press relations, and the uses of television.

Perhaps the greatest historical value of the Name Series lies in its documentation of the philosophical side of the President. It seemed to be characteristic of Eisenhower that he was more likely to discuss philosophical questions with his friends and family than with governmental associates. He wrote lengthy letters to his brothers Milton and Edgar, as well as to such close friends as Charles S. Jones, Aksel Nielsen, Pug Ismay, Clifford Roberts, William Robinson, and Swede Hazlett. In letters to these and other friends the President expounded upon his philosophy of government (including definitions of, “Middle of the Road” and “Modern Republicanism”), economics, the nature of the communist threat, America’s role in the world, and even such esoteric matters as the significance of the end of America’s continental frontier and the philosophy of Jean Jacques Rousseau.

In regard to the philosophical dimension of Eisenhower, the President’s correspondence with Swede Hazlett should be singled out for special mention. The President wrote exceedingly long letters to his Abilene boyhood friend, a retired naval officer living in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. Covering the years 1941 to 1958, the year of Hazlett’s death, the Eisenhower-Hazlett correspondence touches upon most of the prominent public-policy issues and perhaps most fully reveals Eisenhower’s attitudes, beliefs, and values.

In addition to the subjects mentioned above, the series contains important materials pertaining to Eisenhower-family genealogy, Dwight D. Eisenhower’s experiences as a young man and West Point cadet, World War II, and the history of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Foundation and Library.

Finally, researchers should be aware that several folders from other series of Eisenhower’s Papers as President may have been filed mistakenly in the Name Series at some point in time prior to the deposit of the papers in the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library. Examples of such folders include those titled “Gold” and “Guided Missiles.” It is possible that such folders were filed at one time in the Administration Series.

NOTE: Some of the more significant subjects documented by manuscript materials in various file folders have been noted within brackets [] after individual file folder titles on the attached container list. However, when such information appears it should not be construed as exhausting all subjects documented within a given folder.
