Dear sir,

I have been told that the elephant selected to march in the inaugural parade has need of a daily fifth of whiskey. It also appears that while he has a form of lodging in a Washington fire house, assurance of this daily medicine has not been provided. This state of affairs is alarming. My wife and I enclose our check for ten dollars as a small contribution to the animal's bar bill. A personal endorsement of this check would be treasured; but if this is not possible, a rubber stamp would do, even if this suggests the Truman administration.

With all good wishes to you thru the years to come,

Charles T. Bunnell
